WILSON COURSES

Structural Drafting.
Concrete Drafting
Concrete Railway Structures.
Railway Bridge Engineering.
Concrete Highway Structures.
Highway Bridge Engineering.
Preparatory Course.

More and more the development of reinforced concrete construction for railway structures is demanding specialized knowledge and training on the part of railway engineers engaged in this branch of work. That is why, today, the big percentage of students in our general courses in Structural Engineering and Bridge Engineering are railway engineers. They are taking advantage of the opportunity these courses offer for keeping abreast of the changing requirements of their jobs.

Anticipating the desires of many thousands of other railway engineers for a more thorough training and a wider experience in modern railway structures, we have arranged two special courses—

and
Railway Bridge Engineering
(By Mail)

requiring less time to complete but which are equally as thorough in the work covered as our broader courses. Like all other famous WILSON courses, Concrete Railway Structures and Railway Bridge Engineering are designed to train students to DO THE WORK as railroads want it done. There are no tedious discussions of intricate theory—just work that leads straight to competency. This is not textbook reading, but actual work under the direction of competent engineers who have had years of experience in the fields covered.
